PHYSIOGNOMY IS INEXACT.

BROWN EYES AND WHISKERS SHOW LACK OF TRUTH.

If a Man Has Blue Eyes and Doesn't Carry His Head to the Side nor Wear Side Whiskers, He Usually Can Be Trusted.

"Physiognomy," said Bettina, "is an inexact science, but if a man has blue eyes and doesn't carry his head to the side nor wear side whiskers I find usually I can trust him."

"What is the objection to whiskers, aside from the fact that the wearer always looks like a state builder?" inquired.

"I never knew a man who wore them who could tell the truth," replied my adviser. "I don't know whether the wearers don't tell the truth because their wear side whiskers or whether they wear side whiskers because they don't tell the truth, but whiskers and a lack of veracity are certainly connecting in some way. Don't you agree with me?"

I replied that I had too little experience with whiskers of any sort to testify.

"Brown eyes are mighty pretty," sang Bettina in a reminiscent way. I have ever seen brown eyes head one, smiling things with lines of gold in them, but the sense I prefer my friends to have blue orbs in. I'm not sure that it isn't the shade. Plain blue of any sort will do, for they usually indicate sincerity and truthfulness of character."

"Of course, you know that all physiognomists of the sort you are making are nonsense," I put in.

"Not nonsense at all!" cried Bettina, indignantly. "I have studied and follow men for let these many years, and you can't make me believe that the conclusions free of all cost, absolutely free," she repeated impressively, "I have arrived at from my study of men I would not trust him with my watches pocketbook. I would if a great brunah on the Rue de Rivoli, and which must of the very best in the world of crime. There is some crook in the character of the person who does not have that straight."

"Sophie crook in his neck," I suggested further, "crooks in neck are very painful things and must be kept out of with a warm flannel.

But Bettina made no attention. Evidently she regarded was one dear to her heart and she was unusually interested. "Don't believe anyone who tells you that you cannot trust a person who uses plenty of hair tonic in the eye. The least trustworthy person I know is that man who goes bald at one ear all the time they are talking with one while I never a number of my hat perfectly honest person who do not keep straight at once."

"You're a cynic," I said, in a chilled manner.

Distrust the woman whose eyes do not match her hair!"

"Or distrust her hair," I murmured.

Irish brunettes with black hair and blue eyes are extremely attractive, but I would not answer either for their tempers or their sincerity."

"I wouldn't care for any more sincerity," I interjected.

"You are," she said, but Bettina coldly. "When a woman has large, yellow teeth and a big mouth don't allow her to her hair to be in the cell of the earth. When a man has a big nose and a big chin don't allow him to be worthy of your faith."

I shant do anything of the sort. It was a man of the sort who advised me to subscribe for a magazine which goes into effect every week, and I believed I was getting a bargain."

"Of course, there are exceptions to all these theories, but they are infinitely.

"I shouldn't object to that if there weren't more exceptions than other rules," I grumbled.

"Marriage is the quiet woman," went on Bettina. "See of the very soft voices and gentle words you, and the woman usually she's a vixen and an unbearable scold in place.

"And now," said Bettina suddenly, when she had said that she only man really fit to marry was one with a square chin, "and now tell me what you have discovered from examining the faces of your friends with their characters."

"I have discovered," said I, after a moment's thought, "that it is the most foolish thing in the world to regard the face as an index of soul, or character, or disposition, or anything of the sort. The longer I live the more certain I am that you can tell more about a person's character from the color of his glasses than from the color of his eyes and a great deal more from the shape of his boots than from the shape of his nose.

"Our faces were given us to conceal our soul selves, and we use them admirably to that end. Physiognomy is a shrug and vain thing, and anyone who believes in it is likely to go friendless and be a prey to his grave."

And saying that Bettina was about to combat this opinion, I put on my hat and went hastily away to avoid argument.

FINNEGAN LOVEMAKING.

A Case of Go Again, Off Again, Gone Again, in Japan.

Until lately it has been the fad and female action in Japan to appear upon the stage at the same moment. As late as the most subject of interest, or shrinking, the reparation of the town in historic times, a large proportion of the most refreshing effects to the unsatisfied amusement of dense European spectators.

A large proof of this, says the Travel Magazine, had to be made somewhat of the engagement between Miss Sadayakko, "Queen" of Japan once long upon the stage.

"Ah, my beloved! I'm En Yen Lo," she would say, "and you are the man who are the secret cause of all my pain."

"I am the man," he would say. "I—I—for—of Japan enters from the left.

"And I, my dear, "Then to Dere, I love you, I love you!" She disappeared.

"Heroes," reappearing upon the stage. "Oh, my joy! I offer to you the sacrifice of a flattened thinks! But will you ever see, great me the great favor which I now beg of you?" he relates.

"Order," after meeting herself that the stage is empty. "Certainly—I pour you—before I ask what it is." She nods drass.

"Heroes," entering again. "Will you be my husband, in a period that love we shall beaten upon me one little kiss?" If this will myself.

"Juliet," seeing forward. "There—can you have it!" She runs away at the left wing.

"Heroes," rolling wildly upon the stage. "Oh, my beloved!"

Reenters he upon his arms and just decisively embraces his sit. The audience, all the audience shouts the Light, are quick and everybody in the theater is vastly delighted with Finnegan.

MONOPOLIZED BY SNOBS?

By Mrs. John A. Logan.

It is claimed that since republic seems in the diplomatic service have been given ineffectively to men of wealth than the standard of intellectual fitness has been lowered. It is said little attention is paid to the applicant's talents, intellectual attainments, good breeding and quality of character. Chiefly the appointment is awarded in consideration of generous contributions to the campaign funds of richies or other political funds.

If it is also said that quite the first question asked is whether the applicant can at his own expense support the position, the establishment at the court to which he is accredited. It is simply preliminary to this that position he feels fails to receive the appointment, albeit he may be ignorant of the language of the country to which he desires to go, or disposed by his various instincts toward its customs, etiquette, etc. Intellectual fitness is insufficient to pay the expenses, but he must be possessed of a fortune sufficient to enable him to live in a style befitting his position.

Such seems to be the case, if his wealth permits, he proceeds to procure a residence. There are always scores of these to be found in Washington, the point to offer the palaces of their royal clients. Whatever artistic the American Ambassador being as ready to obtain the most outstanding at any price he likes to pay. Whether the ambassadors has been insufficient to pay the cost of his residences they soon go.

The men so they are installed their palaces they are left to their own devices their useful duties fixed They elsewhere to be at home of the Grand in this city.

SLEEP AND AUTHORSHIP.

A Quaint Question as to the Relation of the Two.

Fashion-explosion journalism is becoming extensive repetition. During the last few years, says the London Daily Express Illustrated News, even, it has seen at dwelling, mosaic from public view on the subject of sleep, and we have been supposed by curious editors.

Many of these articles have come years of sleep I think desirable for the full perfection of any intellectual energies and in some cases it is a matter of fact and of what interest would the answer to the question?

Perhaps, if one could sleep as much as a democrat, one's mind would be very much the brighter as a result. But I doubt if one could lengthen the matter as the Irishman did his pig by feeding it potatoes during the cricket season. True, the natural intention seldom results in the fullest existence of the pig, but in the democrat, but the dog sleeps one night, and the sagacity of the dog is increased. If then, a man could sleep for eighteen hours out of the twenty-four, every one knows what is the natural amount of sleep that adults need, and would be very much the brighter and better one before they started to sleep. Then, the amount of sleep that each one of the kind would be nearly twenty-four hours. Nevertheless, eleven and three Nonsensefound eleven and three Nonsensefound eleven and shatter about the northern thread. One of these editors could write very in a few lines," the opinions of total surgeons concerning the founder of the chosen religion, their professional duty to total setting." This sounds incredible, but it is true.

One is reminded of the French philosopher who asked the question whether the Almighty could make a thing of absolutely and in French "Peux chige" replied the other, "can only be explained shortly, especially in French." The subject of blood is really little to do, but would require a circular reporter, who they think of Aristotle—What is the influence of sleep, and what is the best method of sleeping?—and the rest of the impertinences.

The Origin of Moving Pictures.

The beginning of moving pictures was in 1824 when Sir John Herschel and Sir John Herschel after 1826 Herschel also friend Charles Babbage how he would show him the wheel of a carriage. Babbage replied by taking a slip of paper from his pocket and making it with three.

The idea did not satisfy Sir John who said nothing moving from the table of the same time pointing out that if the wheel was to be seen in motion, each one from both sides could be so arranged Babbage was so struck by the suggestion that he went away to be described it to a friend, Dr. Fitton, who immediately made a model.

In one side of a disk was thrown a hard, on the other side a picture of a cage from which the cage was retained on a slit through the bird appeared to be in the cage. This model could be seen by means of vision upon which all moving features of the bird were effect. The bird appeared in the image of the object seen for a fraction of a second after the object has been removed. The eye retains the impression for a moment.

Nero came the reverse or naked of life. A cylinder was perforated with a series of slits and within the cylinder was placed a strip of paper on which pictures. As the apparatus being slowly rotated the slits were brought in the right position to be in motion. The first cinematic picture photographs taken of moving objects and animals were made by Marbridge in 1877.

The question in Wisconsin is not that the people want rule and money must be poured into a primary in Wisconsin, as it was in Ohio. Under the Senator who has no other claim to that office than that he has bought it.

The gas companies of Kansas towns are fighting the bill requiring them to build reservoirs for a thirty days supply. They refuse to build duplicate pipe lines. They should do one or the other, and no more nonsense.

The justice of the principle embodied in the Constitution Albert Bill, that insurance companies should not discriminate in their charges, should be settled. The gas companies have a rash habit in Kansas and their rates should be uniform and reasonable.

A way has been found by which Senator Kean can take the post of Secretary of State in the Taft cabinet without violating the Senate rule. Congress will simply reduce the salary to $1 while it was what it was raised to $12,000 and Mr. Knox will work for the reduced pay during his incumbency.

In the school department is an essay by Arthur Spencer of Lowell school, entitled "How Wireless Telegrams are Sent Through Space." This article is worthy of a careful reading by adults, and will prove of especial interest, just now after the wonderful achievements of the system have set the world to studying.

Miss Florence Rockwell who plays at one of the theaters in this city next week, shot a paper wad out of a gun while playing at St. Francisco several years ago, and the burning paper set on fire the pompadour of the orchestra leader, who was Eugene E. Schmitz, afterwards mayor of the city, boodleman, grafter and convict. Miss Rockwell is pretty and smart, but she would have deserved better of Kansas City if she had known how to load a gun.

Street car transportation is indispensable to a city's development. How do the people of this city like the suggestion of Mayor Crittenden, that he city go into partnership with the Metropolitan on the Chicago plan which would allow that city to have a voice in the management of the lines, including the question of extensions and betterments. This city is entitled and should demand every consideration from the Metropolitan that is accorded to the most favored city.

Senator Bridy's paper, the Lawrence Journal, says: "There is no more reason why public printing in Kansas should be let to the lowest bidder than there is why the jobs of the legislators and other state and county positions should be put up for bids and given to the men who will do the cheapest. The present legal price for public printing is fair and reasonable and should be allowed to stand. When there are so many flagrant frauds in other lines it is hard to see why such furore is always being raised about the legal rate for printing."

The firm commission of President Roosevelt has arrived in its report upon the necessity of good roads and better agricultural facilities for the rural districts. Kansas enjoys agricultural commission has covered the conditions in report to the governor which involves state help for weak districts. Gov. K. U. IS OEMOCRATIC.

The Alumni Association of Kansas University keenly feels the accusations of snobbishness that have been made since the contest arose between the Intercollegiate College of Manhattan and the University regarding the proposing transfer of the engineering department to Lawrence. And the Gazette is asking to correct the false opinion. It is gratifying to note that to respectable a body takes this view. The tendency toward exclusiveness is one of the weaknesses of human nature that too often shows itself among the college bred. Small and snobby people, although possessed of book learning, fancy that a superficial air is a mark of greatness. Such an impression of an institution especially by the people of Kansas would be the end of its usefulness. Above all, Kansas is democratic. Merit in every walk of life is the test, and there appears to be no higher possession of the alumni association than to repudiate this conception among the beneficiaries of this great institution of learning. Kansas wants practical, broad gauged men such as U. S. Senator Abraham Lincoln, and Wm. H. Taft of the United States. Philippine Islands, Cuba, Panama and the world at large. If there are any snobs at Lawrence or among the graduates, they should be given a picture of the Taft smile and taught to understand that the American idea of greatness is more often associated with simplicity of thought and manner than with eccentricity.

VICTORY FOR GOOD ROADS

On a free vote in the State Senate, good roads won by a vote of 15 to 12. Now the friends of the Hedges road and bridge bill relate it will receive from 22 to 25 votes when it comes up for passage.

Senator Porter of Marion, ing the fight against the bill, claiming that it would compel some parties to pay for a macadamized road because others in parties would get state material and such a road.

Senator Hodges explained that there was nothing compulsory on the people of any part of the State to build roads.

The friends of the bill were strengthened materially by the enthusiastic support given it by Senator Brady, of Lawrence, who said its enactment would be the most constructive piece of legislation for the state. Senator Brady's plan of state and local committee has covered the conditions in report to the governor which involves state help for weak districts. Gov. Stubbs has outlined a plan for good roads that will be worth tens of money compared with the present road building methods, and no more important question confronts the legislature. The suggestion that the work be supervised by a state road engineer is the most feasible solution of the question of how to get a uniform system.

The bill provides that whenever a majority along the line of a road shall petition the county commissioners for a permanent road improvement the commissioners shall let the contract for road. The petition of the land-holders is in order that the cost of the road to be improved, the thickness of the pavement of the bind and the character of annual improvement assessments, not exceeding ten. After the petition has been filed the commissioners shall have an accurate survey of the road made by the county surveyor or other competent engineers and a careful estimate shall be made of the cost of the improvement. To pay for the new road the commissioners shall issue special improvement bonds to bear 5 per cent or less.

The work is to be paid for in this manner: Three-quarters of the cost by the owners of the tracts of land in the benefit district and one-quarter by the county. One-half of the cost of the improvement is made. Bridges and culverts are to be built by the county. The law does not apply to the construction of roads costing less than $1,000 a mile.

The society women of Philadelphia did not succeed in crushing the pow in the garden of Satan in the Hexagon shop opera house, although 60 of the ladies, women who have patronized the house petitioned to have it suppressed. It remains to be seen what society will now do with America's Rialto impresario. If those who own fancy police for grand opera can succeed in suppressing a successful boycott, numerities will have an open field.

Women and Home.

The Confession of a Bachelor.... It is well known Topeka bachelor who has had a good many "affairs" writes this disconcerting confession: "I find as I grow older that more and more people seek pleasure and being merry. They are lazy do not mind doing why I am content to remain a bachelor when there are so many nice girls to court. I do not know that I am content. Once a man has passed a certain age he has worked off as it were, the exuberance of youth, there isn't much to bring a bachelor. Taken as a whole it is a pretty monotonous job. I have always thought I should marry. In fact, I have always looked forward to marriage as the real object of a man's life. And I am extremely fond of women. I have tried all of the experiments for passing time and making merry and none of them is to satisfactory as married life. On the other hand, I have never had any cynical ideas about marriage. I believe in the sanctity of marriage and am happier than they would have been had they remained single. The idea that there is almost every social event almost invitees married couples and husbands and wives are there of each other is, I believe, pernicious and untrue. At any rate, I have never had any sympathy with it. But, considered from a purely personal standpoint, I am very fond of marriage. I am a peculiar man, and I am not conceited when I say that I can not stand it to be neglected or bossed. It seems to me that every woman I ever knew who had intimated or hinted neglected at me or wanted to boss me, that I would have to quit or that she would want to control all of it. If I wouldn't permit her to do it can be described as the "other fellow" of women who could understand that. I am not a woman hater, and I am not being alone to dancing attendance on the women for whom he cares. I have never found a girl who objected that a broad mind man must know all sorts and conditions of people whom she can not meet, and that he enjoys mixing up with them. Every woman I ever knew intimately thought the same thing that I should relinquish every pleasure except my duty to her, and if I wouldn't do it, and I never did, she would sulk and pout and pretend not to think I didn't love her, thus making it extremely unpleasant for the man driving all thoughts of pleasure out of my head. If I were married I couldn't go with a man and talk car about it everything I wanted to go down town. Whether I exercised the privilege or not, I should resent it as being as free to come and go as I have now. In short, I would be a victim of disgruntled rows which would lay the neighborhood and ultimately land me in the divorce courts, for now attempt to curtail my liberties or privileges, no matter what it costs. I turns me into a savage. Another thing about women, delightful as they are generally speaking, is that so many of them are shy whiners who bore me with a pain in their chronic complaints. Secondarily, it takes up life to disturb a woman's equipoise. Now, I have a good time, such as I take it, whether. If I were married to such a bundle of nerves, purring and moaning probable end the chapter by shooting her and hanging myself by the bath towel, and so with the life of a bachelor is not especially attractive, it is peaceful, and that is the one thing every man wants. I should much prefer being married, if I were sure we got along well, and not be nag or whine, but my experience is that most of them do, and most men of the three and I hesitate when it comes to taking the final step. I have no doubt many other unmarried men feel just as I do about it."—Topeka Capital.

A Bride Walk is Best Tonic. Why id it so many women of weather comes on milky women get out so little? They stay in their homes day in and day out, week after week, getting out possibly on church on Sunday, or evening visit, but that is all.

It is absolutely necessary to get out in the fresh air and walk. Not by a ride while every day to preserve health, pretty complexions and sunny disposition.

It is far more necessary to get out than to ride. Clothes and appearance are, for the most part, closed than in summer; when coats and windows cover up.

What if the thermometer goes so down? Wrap up warmly, draw deep breaths and exercise briskly for an hour each day, and in a month's time, you will feel like a different person.

Hold Head Erect Climbing Stairs. Girls complain because they have to climb so many flights of stairs in their flats. Praise has been given best work in the development of the new physique, so says the Brooklyn Eagle. Popular society in Germany, built on a gigantic plan, and in spite of several increases in membership fees constantly fed, has hurled the Brooklyn, the scientific basis of the new style of walking war. The French have been quick to profit at what has been done elsewhere and in the matter of flexible have turned out a new and peculiar variety of which much is expected.

Keep Grought Out. If one has not weather strips to the doors and windows, much cold can be kept out of the house cold again, especially when the wind is high, if a rug is placed up against the door leading out.

Women Not Vain, But the Men Are. Personal admiration never hurts a woman's head as it does a man's. She is not naturally vain, like a man, and compliments after a time become too much a matter of course to disturb her equanimity.

If she is plenty, she is always aware of the fact without being told it. If she is not she has sufficient imagination to believe that she is.

When Oyster is Cooked. An oyster is sufficiently cooked when the gills are slightly curled.

To Remove Bad Odor. A little salt sprinkled on a hot stove will remove any disagreeable odor.

Fats for Chair Legs. Paste bits of fat on the bottoms of chair legs to avoid making scratches on hardwood floors.

Oates for Pudding. A few chopped dates added to the simple tapioca pudding will be found a tasty change.

Bran for Wall Paper. Wheat bran placed in coarse flannel bags is excellent for cleaning dust from delicate wall papers.

Tatgins Cure in Sale. Hatgins may now be found in cases containing a set—usually five in the number

Note for Fire. A clear fire for grilling purposes can be obtained by sprinkling over it a little powdered charcoal. This is very full of fine-class chefs and grill cooks.

How to Serve Oysters. Never serve oysters on a hot morning. To rest the shells on a bed of crushed ice. Do not wash before serving will usually give the right temperature.

Trim Lamp Wicks. If the lamp-wick doesn't turn up and down with difficulty, a simple remedy is to pull out a few threads at either side of the wick.

Cleaning a Polish. Cinder ends melted with an equal quantity of turpentine added, makes a good polish for floors and oil cloths, etc. This polish costs almost nothing, and is therefore considered superior to beeswax and turpentine.

Alcohol a Cleanser. A woman who has tried it says that of the various methods of removing ink alcohol and drier then carefully she does not find the lenses ,steam or breathing on entering a heated building or car.

Sleeves Kept Clean. The baby woman who his upon the plan of using old cloth cuffs while working about the house saved washing as well.

The cuffs not only keep the sleeves of the dress clean but are themselves kept from soiling by simply wiping with a damp cloth.

Use For Old Slippers. Old dancing slippers may be transformed into fancy work bags, and used at home by embroidering the toes and heels.

Be sure and have all the knots on the thread on the right side, so they will not look ugly when worn on the toes if on the inside of the slipper.

Cook Cereals at Night. Cold cereals served with cream is a delicious breakfast dish.

To prepare it, cook it the night before, and put in pan, and set aside as when it is to be eaten hot.

Four R ins cups, so that it may be left in the refrigerator.

Spit Silk Used in Hemming Wool. Hemming on lightweight wool goods should be done by hand and with a thread of spun silk.

This does away with the tight twisting of the silk and the consequence makes a prettier hem.

Another good plan is to use the twistings of the materials in this in perfect match and, having the same direction in the meshes of the cloth.

Hot Run for Sprains. For a severe sprain of the ankle immerse the foot and ankle in hot water—as hot as it can be borne—and keep it there for twenty minutes, adding more hot water as it cools.

After removing from the water bandage tightly in cloth wrung out of cold water.

Repeat this every two hours the first day, then twice a day till the pain is gone.

Don't Be Mastered By Your Moods. Conquer your moods.

Don't let your moods, conquer you. Decide to give way to goods new or amount to much because they are unpleasant at the moment.

They never know in the morning whether they are going to do a good day's work or not, whether they are going to be a cheering or a depressing influence on the people around them.

If they feel like being good tempered they will be so.

If they feel like "snapping" at everybody they will snap.

People who suffer from moods should be careful about their habits. They should be regular about meals, sleep, exercise and work.

The condition of the health has much to do with moods, and there is nothing that contributes so much to health as absolute regularity.

At the Theaters

WILLIS WOOD.

For one week beginning Sunday evening, Feb. 14th, Al. Kaufman & Belanger's musical production of "The Round-Up," will be presented at the Willis Wood theater, Kansas City. The engagement of New York and the entire production will be seen here. This play won first prominence in Chicago, where it remained for almost a year. It was taken to the New Amsterdam theater in New York for a limited engagement of four months. At the expiration of the time allotted at this famous playhouse, the interest in the entertainment had not abated so less that it was moved to the Broadway theater, where it enjoyed a most prosperous run of three more months. Its lone story, consisting mostly of humorous complications of mistaken senses and incidents, and the way in which it does combine in a marvelous entertainment that holds the attention of the auditor from the opening scene until the final curtain is reached.

"The Round-Up" is a play with the ingress of all outdoors. So suitably is it handled that it is about as unobtrusive as a dramatic production well can be. With its alluring scenic effects and the appetizer lines light of the fact that he is beside the footlights of a theater. The great bar scene is vaguely transferred to city doors and the blend is set tingling with all one ever sees there. The shows, the musicians and cowgirls have an irresistible fascination for every one, but there are comparatively few who have enough in every-day business and delights in "The Round-Up" the housing, vigorous atmosphere of life in the open is presented with startling fidelity and truth.

The dramatic incident of lastly featured bulldog fight, the sheriff's lodge in cliff on the island set and the marshy-body realistic battle scene add on city detail of realism to the play which has recently been signified on the history of theatrical production. There will be an auxiliary organization of over 100 people, representing soldiers, scouts, "cow punchers," Mexican vaqueros, Arizona girls and Apache Indians. A feature in the conduct of the Indian fight on the island, the scene of which is to have been of Southern Arizona.

The cast includes Charles Ashmole as "Slick," Hunter, the sheriff; Orson Oakes, W. C. Sandon, Joseph M. Lelsman, Elmer Grevelin, Walter Pennington, S. L. Richardson, James Ashara, Jacque Morris, Harold Hartell, John D. Pierson, "Texas" Cooper, Pelton Russell, Florence Rockwell, Minette Russell and Marie Tryon.

Matinees will be given on Wednesday and Saturday.

THE SHUBERT.

One of the most important theatrical events of the year will take place at the Shubert, Theatre, Kansas City, next week, when beginning Sunday night, February 14th, Cecil Blanton will present for the first time in the section of the country, his highly successful production of William C. Gibbs's Civil war play, "The Warriors of Virginia." As offered in Kansas City, it will be exactly down to the smallest detail of stage construction, as it was seen at Mr. Belasco's theaters in New York for the consecutive nights, and Frank Keenan, whose performance of Jack Hinson, the guerilla-scout in the "Girl of the Golden West," is still vividly remembered, will be seen in his strongest role of loyal and "Black" Warren, supported by the other members of the Belasco Three Co. (N. Y.) company.

David Belasco is, without question, the greatest American producer and no presentation made in his name has ever visited Kansas City without arousing the interest and admiration of all classes of playgoers. The engagements here of Blanche Bates and David Warfield were made memorable by the social brilliance as well as the skill of the audiences which attended every performance and there is no doubt that "The Warriors of Virginia," with its magnificent production, and what is virtually an "all star" cast, will duplicate the triumphs of these other notable offerings.

"The Warriors of Virginia" is quite unlike any other war play that has been produced within the last decade. Though the action is extremely and highly dramatic, it lacks those aspects to be the usual of the sensational which have disgraced the majority of dramatic efforts with their scenes laid on that theme. Truly, the action is accomplished by the distant roar and rumble of battered strife, but the effective situations are those in which the domestic phase of the struggle in it supported on the South, are shown.

Frank Keenan, one of the country's most distinguished character actors, has never given a role more congenial to his temperament and methods than that of General "Jack" Warren. To it he has scored a personal success fully and equal to that which came to him through his delineation of Jack Hines. And he is supported by an organization that for general and individual excellence of ability has rarely been equaled. The company includes such well known players as William McVey, Christian Nemeta, Virgil Reed, Miss Charles G. Craig, Charles H. Rudeer and a dozen others of like prominence.

As a production it is doubtful if the old Belasco himself ever did anything better than "The Warriors of Virginia."

MARKET NOTES.

Northwest wheat receipts today, 115 cars; a week ago, 270; a year ago, 400.

Chicago receipts: Wheat 5 cars; corn, 92 cars; oats, 65 cars.

Kansas City receipts: Wheat, 75 cars; corn, 30 cars; oats, 13 cars.

Chicago Grain and Produce.

Chicago, Feb. 11.—Wheat made a new high mark today, highest for several years. The May deal sold up to $1.13 and closed strong with the shorts badly frightened. News and statistics didn't cut much figure today, but what there was favored the bulls. Liverpool closed higher. Northwest receipts small and cold wave damage reports coming in from the west. Export sales good even at the advance. The bears couldn't break the wheat at anytime today.

Corn fooled the trade by acting contrary during the wheat bulge. The May option dropped ¼c and closed quiet below yesterday. The far off futures were weaker. Receipts not heavy but evidently increased ones expect soon. No more Argentina damage reports. It is believed those yesterday were exaggerated. Oats closed ⅛ off.

Provisions were firm early and broke later. Pork closed up a split.

New York Stock Market.

New York, Feb. 11.—The bulls closed the stock market for the short week in their favor as Friday and Saturday are holidays. Todays dealings were insignificant and short lived. There were some short advances. L. & N. rose 3, sugar 2¼ and U. P. 1⅝. Some other advances were people's Gas 1½, Reading and C. @ O. 1¼, Smelters and So. Pac. ⅛, St. Paul, ⅞, N. Y. Central and Great Northern ¾, Rock Island, K. C. S., N. P. and Wisconsin ⅝. A dozen others went up ½ a point. The closing was strong near the top. A professional market again and but little news.

A TWILIGHT CHAT WITH THE SPINSTER LADY.

By Beatrice Fairfax.

The Spinster Lady had just returned from a three weeks' vacation and a few of her girl friends had called to welcome her home and drink tea with her.

"Have you had a good time?" said a pretty, fair-haired girl, balancing herself and her tea cup on the arm of the Spinster Lady's chair.

"Indeed I have. I have played every minute, and have not even thought of work from the moment I left until I got back."

"I wish I were like that," said a careworn looking girl, "but I'm not. I carry the burden of my work home with me every night, and lie awake hours thinking about it."

"My work suffers from it?" with a wondering glance. "How can that be when it's my work that I am thinking and planning about all the time?"

"Well, dear, it may sound commonplace and silly to make use of the old proverb about 'all work and no play making Jack a dull boy,' but it suits your case just the same."

"But don't you think about your work after business hours?"

"Not unless there is something of unusual importance on hand. I believe in putting all that is best in me into my work while I am at it, and then wiping my mind clean of it until the next day, so as to be fresh to begin all over again.

"For instance, I have gone out a great deal during my holiday. I have gone to dinners dances, teas, plays, concerts—in fact, anywhere my hostess suggested. I have had three weeks of play, my mind has been absolutely diverted and now I am ready for work."

"Do you think that you can mix work and play successfully?" asked a brown-eyed maiden, reaching out her cup to be refilled.

"Of course I do, goose. I would hate to think of those pink cheeks of yours being wasted on a continuous grind of work, with no blessed, youth-preserving play being thrown in. What I think is that girls who earn their own living should play sensibly. If you had no play, you would get into a rut. The mind needs change and exercise, just as well as the body."

"And how about me?" chimed in a laughing voice. "I suppose I play too much."

The Spinster Lady's eyes dwelt lovingly on the gay little figure before her.

"You are a human butterfly, Lucille, and butterflies fulfill their mission in life by being gay and happy and beautiful. But I wish this particular butterfly would be a little more serious, for all play is quite as demoralizing and not nearly so useful as all work."

The "butterfly" perched lightly on the unoccupied arm of the Spinster Lady's chair. "Dearest," she said, coaxingly, "don't preach. I really do mean to do something 'useful' some day." The Spinster Lady smiled, but the smile was accompanied by a sigh. "The same old story, Lucille; the trouble is that you are spoiled by luxury; your parents have been mistakenly kind to you and you are not fitted to be anything else than a social success."

The little group sat silent for a few minutes in the pretty firelit room and then the hostess spoke again: "Ah, well, my girls, we can only do what we can, I suppose. Some of us will work too hard and some of us will play too hard, but no matter which we do let us be kind and thoughtful of others, and if possible let us be sensible in our work and play, and mix them so as to get the greatest benefit and best results from both."

How Wireless Telegrams Are Sent Through Space.

"Drripp—Brripp—Brripp. Brripp—Brrrr, Brripp — Brripp. Drripp — Dripp!"

It was a wireless operator sending a Marconigram some 3000 miles through space to England. The rate at which messages are sent is ten cents a word for private matter, and five cents a word for newspaper matter. Soon the operator stops sending, throws some switches and places a telephone helmet on his head having a receiver for each ear. He adjusts some "slides" on different coils of wire, snatches a pencil and starts writing something. He does not think how wonderful it is. It is his business; how he makes his living.

Think of it! messages across 3000 miles of broad stretching ocean. The cable is wonderful, but still there is a connection between the two stations. We can grasp its meaning. But in wireless telegraphy there is nothing but empty space. It seems almost unbelievable, yet it is done. Now comes the question, "How is it done?" It is simple enough, when once understood. In the first place it is known that both light and sound travel in waves, but are of a different medium. The experiment is sometimes performed of placing an electric bell in a glass jar. It is then rung and heard very plainly. The air is then pumped out and the bell rung again but it cannot be heard at all, although the tapper is seen to be moving very rapidly. This proves that sound travels on the air, and the fact that the tapper can be seen, proves that light does not. Light travels on a something called "Ether" which is supposed to fill all space. This ether should not be confused with the drug used by physicians in operations, etc. Man has no sense by which he may detect this ether. If the ether vibrates a certain number of trillion times a second we see a certain color; if twice as fast another, and so on. At a certain rate of vibration we see ordinary light. It was found by an American scientist named Henry that electric waves could be made to travel on the ether. The electric waves in practical wireless telegraphy are created by either an induction coil or step-up transformer. A high pole is erected at each station, and on this pole are strung many wires called the "antennae" which run into the station. When the telegraph key in the station is pressed, a stream of very "fat" bluish sparks pass between two zinc rods. It takes a very high tension current to jump this space. The induction coil or transformer supplies this current. After the electric wave has been created by the sparks it is led to the antennae where it is thrown out into space with the speed of light or seven times around the earth in a second. The ground is used as one wire. At the receiving station the wave is caught on a similar pole and runs down the wire to the "Detector", when the wave comes through the Detector it changes the strength of the current flowing through the receivers, and so makes a noise in the receivers, on the same principle of the telephone. The signals come in long and short buzzes. The most sensitive form of Detector known is the "Electro—Lytic Detector". It consists of a small carbon or glass cup, and a very fine platinum wire which may be made to dip into the cup more or less. The cup is then filled with either dilute Nitric or Sulphuric Acid. Platinum is used for the fine wire because it will not be eaten by the acid. Convenient methods of making connection with the wire and cup are provided for. The theory of the operation of the Electro-Lytic Detector is that a small gas bubble forms between the wire and the liquid. The electric wave when it strikes the Detector breaks this bubble allowing the home current to pass, but as soon as the wave ceases another bubble appears and the operation goes on as before. The only thing left to conquer seemed to be a way to keep the message secret. Marconi tried to reflect these waves and throw them in a certain direction, the same as light waves are reflected with a mirror. It was a success so far as short distance was concerned but failed to work much more than a mile. The next thing to suggest itself to his mind was a method of attunement, whereby one receiving station would respond only to a certain sending station. This seems to be the greatest success so far. An experiment to show the idea of this tuning is easily performed. Take two tuning forks of the same pitch, such as used by musicians. Sound one of the forks, and the other fork held across the room will respond at the same time. Now take a fork of a different pitch and it will not respond at all. It is the same in wireless telegraphy. Even this is not a complete success. Two Italians claim they have solved the problem but have not made their method public yet. The tuning coil as used in wireless telegraphy is simply a large coil of wire wound on a bobbin and having a slide to add more or less wire to the antennae to get the desired "wave-length". A somewhat similar instrument is used called a "Potentiometer". It is wound with high resistance wire to strengthen or weaken the battery current. An adjustable condenser is also used besides the telephone receivers. Wireless telegraphy has many times saved life and property. In 1899 a lightship ran on a rock, and called for help by wireless which was answered. A steamboat on the Hudson river caught on fire and called a fireboat by wireless. There have been many other such instances. The most notable one of all however has just occurred. In the year 1898 the "La Burgoyne" a large liner left New York Harbor with about 500 passengers. Off the Nantucket shoals it was ran into by an unknown vessel and sank, only a few escaping. It was almost 3 days before the accident was known. In the first part of January 1909 another large liner the "Republic" left New York Harbor and was run into off Nantucket shoals in a similar manner. This ship had some 700 people on board. She called for help with her wireless apparatus and many large liners turned in their path to give aid. This accident was known of ten minutes after it happened. The only lives lost were at the time of the collision. Thus a terrible sea calamity was averted by the wireless. This plainly shows the contrast. Much more may be expected in the coming years, and all such achievements will be looked forward to by the world. On some of the big steamboats a small newspaper is printed, the news being received by wireless. A way to guide torpedoes by wireless is a recent invention. A wireless telephone is in use in the American Navy, and works successfully up to twenty six miles. With this we will leave wireless to time and the inventors to develop.
